RE:TTB Notice No.4

Dear Mr. Foster:

I am currently employed by Mark Anthony Brands, Inc. and would like to express my opinion regarding the future viability of flavored malt beverages, also known as FMBs. I strongly oppose TTB's proposal to limit the alcohol contribution from flavoring materials in these beverage products to 0.5% alcohol by volume. In order to establish a more rational standard, I urge TTB to adopt a majority standard that would allow less than 50% of the alcohol content in FMBs to come from flavoring materials. Following are some reasons why my position makes sense.

Notice No.4 suggests that these guidelines must be changed in order to prevent consumer confusion on the source of alcohol in FMTBs. However, as I interact directly with various wholesalers, retailers and consumers on a daily basis, I have seen no confusion whatsoever. I believe this is true because people are not concerned with the source of alcohol rather they choose FMBs simply upon the criteria of taste and price.

We are now experiencing favorable market conditions in the FMB category- sales have grown strongly. This category is one of few that can be so satisfied with its recent past and, hopefully, future prospects in the alcoholic beverage industry. I urge TTB to adopt a standard that all companies can meet-a majority standard that caps the alcohol contribution derived from flavoring materials contained in an FMB to less than 50% of the produces alcohol content. This would satisfy all preliminary objectives and more. First, a majority standard would prevent consumer confusion if any exists. Second, it would establish a nationally uniform standard that would assist the federal government and the states in regulating FMBs. And finally, it would preserve both market stability and competition, maintaining a level playing field for which agencies like yours strive every day to ensure the very core fundamentals of the American marketplace.

For the sake of consumers and a truly competitive marketplace, I encourage TTB to reject the proposed 0.5% standard for FMBs and to -work with the FMB industry to achieve a more reasonable and worable set of rules that can preserve and promote this valuable product category.
